HISTORY/DISCUSSION

Recruitment Process Evolution

In the past, Transit's recruitment process for bus operators was an annual endeavour that took approximately nine months to complete. The process typically attracted several hundred interested applicants vying for 25-30 open positions. In recent years, due largely to the changing needs of the department to recruit more frequently throughout the year resulting in part from an aging workforce, service growth and a competitive labour market, streamlining took place to reduce the process timeline to approximately nine weeks.

Due to considerable challenges being faced in the labour market, the loss of viable candidates due to the wait times between candidate assessment steps and general impacts of the pandemic, a new, more nimble approach was developed in June 2022 whereby the introduction of a one-day “Blitz” process was implemented in which all applications received in three-week block are evaluated in one day. Typically, due to the number of applicants, the Blitz process runs over two-three days with “all hands-on deck” to determine those suitable for formal hire and acceptance into the 31-day bus operator training program. While this is taxing on the Department’s available resources, the Public Service continues this process as it has resulted in positive outcomes in recruitment despite the ongoing labour market challenges faced by transit systems, and most other industries, North America-wide. To date in 2023, Winnipeg Transit has hired a total of 118 new bus operators.

Outreach

Outreach, in various forms, have always been utilized by Winnipeg Transit to supplement its traditional recruitment efforts involving online postings via the City of Winnipeg’s website along with its external posting partner, Indeed. In the past, this supplemental outreach has included the use of local print media, radio, local career fair events, in-person presentations to secondary and post-secondary educational institutions, and partnering directly with Winnipeg-based employment agencies and Indigenous organizations.

More recently, Transit has made more concerted efforts to increase its presence in the community. By connecting with culturally-specific organizations representing the growing numbers of newcomers to Canada and through word of mouth by members of these communities, Transit has benefitted as demonstrated by the diverse representation within its workforce. These connections have also increased access to the number of in-person events and information sharing activities Transit has been able to participate in 2022 and 2023 (See Appendix A). As a result, the operations Division has partnered with Human Resources to hire a retired Operations team member on a contract basis strictly dedicated to outreach, while dedicating the majority of an Assistant Human Resources Consultant Full Time Equivalent (FTE) to these activities and the internal oversight of the Bus Operator recruitment processes. In the Fall of 2023, the Human Resources division will be partnering with the City’s Talent Acquisition group to further expand the Department’s connections and associated opportunities.

Retention Efforts

While recruitment forms a significant piece related to maintaining on-street service delivery, making concerted efforts to retain those employees already hired and trained is, at minimum, of equal importance. While management continues to work with the Amalgamated Transit Union (ATU) at the bargaining table on an amicable agreement further enhancing Transit’s attractiveness to potential applicants, Transit has undertaken a number of other initiatives to aid in making the workplace better for those who already deliver service on its behalf.

The implementation of operator shields in the bus operator compartment within the transit fleet has assisted in providing a safer workplace for those delivering front-line service. The potential for the expansion of that program to incorporate a shield extension on buses is an initiative currently in trial. Improving the communication systems on buses is a project currently in process and will enhance the ability of Control Centre staff to provide consistent assistance and instruction to Operators when faced with challenging or safety-related issues. The incoming security force under the direction of the programs' newly hired Community Safety Team Lead, aims to enhance the City's ability to protect the Operator workspace, while ensuring greater safety for riders.

Within Transit, there are a number of mechanisms in place to ensure employee issues are appropriately addressed and employees have outlets to raise concerns or seek assistance. Some of these include:

- Senior Labour Management Meeting involving members of Transit Senior Leadership and ATU Executive members;
- Workplace Safety and Health Committees;
- Schedules Committee where Operators may raise questions/concerns relating to routes, schedules, timing points, runs that consistently run early/late, etc.;
- Critical Incident Stress Management (CISM) program that immediately and acutely works with employees who have experienced a negative workplace event and require diffusing and relief from duty;
- Employee and Family Assistance Program (EFAP).

Aging Workforce

At present, Winnipeg Transit employs approximately 1,374 staff represented by the Amalgamated Transit Union (ATU). Based on varying combinations of age and service relative to pension eligibility rules, the numbers of those staff capable of retiring today and in the coming five years is as follows:

- Today – 388 or 28.2%
- 1 year – 431 or 31.4%
- 2 years – 480 or 34.9%
- 3 years – 525 or 38.2%
- 4 years – 572 or 41.6%
- 5 years – 608 or 44.3%

These figures don't take into consideration those that opt to resign and withdraw their pensions early to embark on a new path altogether. While the recent pandemic and the resulting economic conditions have inspired some to consider exercising options available to them, it has caused others to re-evaluate how they spend the remainder of their working years. Transit is seeing decisions being made that place other employment opportunities ahead of those within public transit. To date in 2023, Winnipeg Transit has lost a total of 100 bus operators to retirements, resignations and terminations.

Employment Trends

At the outset of the pandemic, organizations and industries across Canada and globally had to considerably adapt the way in which business was conducted and begin the full-scale implementation of new work practices to support the maintenance of service delivery balanced with the physical and mental well-being of their workforce. Staff began reprioritizing what was most important to them, with health, safety, and work-life balance demands tipping the employment scales in favour of the employee. Secure careers offering traditional benefits and standard pension programs began falling short in their ability to attract and retain qualified people. This has resulted in longer and more frequent recruitment cycles, diluting the workforce of dedicated talent and knowledge retention, while greatly increasing the requirement to invest added time, money, and resources in training new hires more often.

As younger generations enter the labour market, the desire to obtain long-term “careers” is no longer a motivator for many within this demographic. Frequent job changes every one to three years is becoming more the norm, with workers seeking that transient flexibility to support the lifestyle they desire. Adapting to this, will be a challenge for an extended period of time for most organizations and will require the streamlining of existing recruitment and training practices, along with greater flexibility and creativity from employers in policy development, collective agreement language negotiation, shiftwork options, and options supporting cultural needs and lifestyle choices.
